WHY FSI CERTIFICATION IS IMPERATIVE

BACKGROUND

The world is a global village and though financial services industry institutions and procedures may differ across jurisdictions, they play similar roles essentially. Whereas the history of the other components of the financial safety-net is as old as banking itself that started several centuries ago, the third component, deposit protection was introduced formally as a nationwide scheme only a century ago. Since 2002 when the premier global association of deposit insurers, International Association of Deposit Insurers (IADI), was founded, it has been growing in membership and evolving with greater momentum. This development is being accentuated by the banking industry's dynamic nature, especially the embrace of technologies to drive new, complex, and sophisticated financial products. Yet, the sophistication and complexity associated with emerging financial landscape trigger and exacerbate financial stability concerns and other peculiar challenges that require organizations to deploy innovative solutions.

CHALLENGES

Despite laudable efforts by national and global institutions to encourage and sustain virile financial system stability, concerns persist, thus leaders and managers of businesses and organizations contend regularly with finding solutions to existential threats. Within the financial safety-net institutions, the knowledge and public awareness about deposit protection scheme and its critical role in financial system stability remain very poor globally. Also, all forms of instruction on it seems limited to what exists within the confines of respective agencies.

Furthermore, virtually all formal instructional settings outside a few agencies lack curricula on this critical component of the financial safety-net. The lender of last resort role of central banks and prudential regulation and supervision seems to enjoy far better recognition ostensibly due to their age and development trajectory. The agility of businesses and organizations to thrive is believed to be essentially a function of the quality of skill set of their workforce. If employees have appropriate skills and are able to deploy innovative and multi-faceted solutions to challenges, leaders and managers achieve sustainable results for their businesses and institutions. The certificate in deposit protection and financial intelligence is a creative solution designed to avail leaders and managers of firms' human resource-based approach to challenges besetting the financial services industry. It completely bridges the gap created by absence of curricula and certification fundamentals within the financial services industry space.
