ARCHITECTURE & LOCATION

A visit to the Clock Tower Inn is like a trip back in time when life moved at a slower pace and dining was truly an experience to be savored. At every turn, the Clock Tower exudes the essence of yesteryear, from the decor to the history of the building itself.

Nestled in the heart of Strathroy, the building was constructed in 1889 by the famous Canadian architect Thomas Fuller, who also designed the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa. Today his trademark four-faced clock stands proud in downtown Strathroy.

Strathroy is small, historic town conveniently located between London and Sarnia just off the 402. Experience history as you take a stroll down our main street with many unique shops. Enjoy the nearby spa, or take a walk in the beautiful park.

London is a mere 20 minutes away and holds many sites and activities to please every taste. The Grand Theatre is a cultural icon of London and produces top-notch entertainment in comedy, drama and musicals. The Victoria Playhouse is also located nearby in the beautiful heritage town of Petrolia.

Whatever your reason for a mid-week or weekend getaway, let the staff at the Clock Tower make your time with us truly special.

A TRIP BACK IN TIME

The Clock Tower Inn is a small, unique featuring eight individually appointed suites, each with its own distinct personality. Each suite has a fireplace, climate controls and wireless internet, in addition to original details that harken back to the days when it was a post office! The Queen Victoria suite and the King Edward suite take luxury one step further with the addition of spa showers in the former office vaults, complete with original steel doors!
